Not illustrated. 1876 Excerpt: .six years younger than Hugh, I answered; but I have been fifteen years, a widow. I have a daughter of fourteen, I added, eagerly. ITonsense! I cannot believe it. Ask Mr. Chester, then. And she is so like Hugh, Lord Eustace. You must see her. I am sure you would recognize his features at once. I shall be delighted to have the opportunity of doing so. Still, it appears incredible to me--you with a daughter of fourteen. You must look like sisters. Some people say we do, I answered, with a quiet laugh. Fancy your being my old friend Hugh s wife, he went on with genuine interest. It must have been sympathy that attracted me to you from the first. Did you never hear him speak of Eustace Annerley? I do not remember. He was with the Rev. Mr. Dean at Gnildford when I met him. He did not often speak to me of his former school-days. Ah! we were both very naughty boys, I am sorry to say, and expelled together from Parnassus House, in Dublin. And so poor old Hugh married at one-and-twenty. What did his parents say to that, Mrs. Power? This question paved a way for the discussion of a subject in which I felt quite at home; and Lord Eustace Annerley having taken a seat beside me, I launched out into a long history of my courtship, marriage, and subsequent troubles, until, I think, he must have known almost as...
