Not illustrated. 1845 Excerpt: . . . the instrument of justification--it puts a material element, water, in the room of the Holy Spirit, just as transubstantiation puts bread in the room of Christ; and in practice it fosters the most deadly delusions. How many may have gone to the eternal state relying on an outward rite as their only title, to discover their fatal delusion at the judgment seat, it is not for me to state. But beyond all question, there is no teaching more calculated in the present day to welcome and encourage the principles and the progress of Romanism than that which places a sacrament, however precious in its own place, in the room of the Holy Spirit of God. I look upon this heresy, as bearing the same relation to baptism which transubstantiation bears to the Lords Supper, and, perhaps, the more perilous of the two. CHAP. V. Subjects of Baptism. 1. All are agreed that baptism is to be administered to believing adults, the previous baptism of the Holy Ghost not superseding, but warranting and demanding the baptism of the church with water. To urge the possession of the first as rendering unnecessary the second, is totally alien to the spirit, usages, and prescriptions of a faith, which insists indeed on the internal grace as the chief thing, but at the same time requires its outward exhibition as its natural and useful expression. The administration of this sacrament with water, in the name of the Father, of the...
